Program Ideas

Skokie Public Library —Making Videos and Podcasts –

“We offered this three-workshop series in December and again in January/February, with a focus on both basic digital production skills as well as peer cohort learning. The December videos are available on our events YouTube page (note: Zoom recording quality)”:

Skokie Public Library's Zine-Making Workshops –

“We offered a series of four themed zine-making workshops first in December, and then again this March. These four-week series of workshops draws on the talents of a multi-departmental team and focuses on supporting community members to learn the discrete skill of creating a physical zine, and the more broad engagement with personal story and perspective sharing. We've made two of our December workshop videos available on our events YouTube page (note: Zoom recording quality!”:

Skokie Public Library Digital Story Creation Project –

“This is a three-part series for kids grades 3-5 during spring break. Two youth librarians and our staff videographer will be working with a cohort of kids to create, film, and produce a digital story video. Very Reading Rainbow vibes, in all the best ways!”

Libraries Making News

Enoch Pratt Free Library (Baltimore): Free to Bmore Podcasts

From Meghan McCorkell, Communications Director: “We want it to be a place that sparks conversations in our community. We feel like that’s a major role of the library. We wanted to stay away from doing a typical podcast about books with authors and book suggestions, etc. I think that has allowed us to grow and keep our audience growing... We book pretty big local names easily now on our reputation alone, and we get lots of local leaders reaching out asking to be on. We also use the “commercial breaks” as our opportunity to highlight library services and programs...I think our podcast is successful because we have meaningful conversations that people want to hear. “
